

Choosing a Psychic

Choosing someone who will give you a professional psychic reading with quality and accurate information can be confusing and difficult.

There is no governing board to examine and license psychic readers. No one to set standards, judge the accuracy or govern ethics. It is up to you to be discriminating when choosing a psychic!

Take the time and responsibility to investigate the personal, as well as the professional life of the person to whom you are going to entrust with sensitive issues and personal information.

Interview the psychic before you make the appointment. Ask:

1. How long have you been working professionally?
- 2.. What kind of training, education, courses of study, have you received, and where?
3. What are your areas of expertise, such as relationships, health, business, finances, family etc?
4. What methods do you use to receive psychic information?
5. Are you involved in other areas such as teaching workshops, national associations, national task forces or research?
6. Is session taped, if not, may I bring my own tape and recorder?
7. What is your hourly rate?

Professional Standards For Accurate Readings

Have the same high expectations that you would during any transactions with your doctor, accountant, therapist, minister, attorney, mechanic, contractor or any other professional. You have the right to demand quality, helpful, accurate psychic information and value for your money and time spent. If the information is vague or inaccurate, you have the right to say so. You also have the right not to pay for an inaccurate reading.

Your professional psychic should be:

1. Emotionally healthy, living a well-balanced and successful life
2. Uses integrity and ethics in both their personal and professional life.
3. Uses confidentiality and professionalism.
4. Can be objective and can create options for you.
5. Give adequate, concrete and useful information that is clearly understood.
6. Tell you the truth instead of what you want to hear.
7. Does not allow their personal issues or prejudices distort or color their reading.
9. Can set aside their ego or their need to be right and give information that is in the highest good of the client.
